

Craig's directions. They also taught me about a match cut which is when two scenes are merged together in editing which requires precise measurements and makes the video flow really nice once finished.

I was also used as a stand in to make sure the camera would fit everything in. He shot so live in the communication scene. Before the other year 105 in the video came in I had to sit in one of the chairs to make sure he shot matched up with the story board and the layout of the set could match. I also had to crawl past the camera wearing my white shirt during the scene just before the library scene so that after editing certain parts of the video can be merged together which is a bit like a match cut.

In conclusion, working behind the scenes of the video production was amazing with my learning about all different important facts that I hadn't even think about before hand.
